

Poultry and its By-Products' Impact on Environment - 1 -

---

By: Dr. Maen Samara

As the poultry industry expands, proper management of poultry by-products becomes an urgent environmental issue that need to be solved. Traditional uses of these by-products requires re-evaluation by the industry itself and all associations that interact with poultry production. We must understand all aspects of poultry operations and how water resources and the environment are affected by these operations.

The writer discusses how poultry by-products are being disposed of in certain countries saying that the Arab researcher still has a lot to learn in order to know how to get rid of them in a way that suits the needs of his community. In the end, the writer poses the following question: on whom does the responsibility of making poultry by-products harmless and environment-friendly lie? He answers by saying that laws and regulations should be put by the appropriate authorities, which should coordinate among each other.